Urbanistica offers a complete documentation on questions concerning the on-going changes in human settlements, from the spatial, but also from the economic, social and political point of view. The journal collects essays and reflections on urban planning history, its roots and on its current developments, in order to assemble and not to disperse theoretical and technical knowledge, favouring instead its sedimentation and selection. This documentation is completed by the reviews of books, both Italian and international, recent or not, that offer a valuable annotated catalogue and working tools. Urbanistica is classified by Anvur (Italian agency for the assessment of university and research) as category A journal, the top one.

Starting with issue 152/2014, under the direction of Federico Oliva, Urbanistica proposes a new focus on the European city. In this way, it opens up different perspectives: together with the presentation and critical review of planning experiences, rooted in the long term history of this journal, it features an on-going reflection on urban projects. Moreover, in line with an urban studies perspective, it proposes interpretations of urban contexts and of their large or small scale transformations, together with cross-cutting emerging questions, able to open up a wider debate, and the account of research experiences, both on going and completed.

Published twice a year, Urbanistica presents original articles from both academics and practitioners with the aim of strengthening knowledge and encouraging cultural exchange on the transformations of cities in Europe and beyond.

The Editor (INU Edizioni) invites contributions on the mentioned topics: they should be original papers, which will be submitted to double anonymous peer review process. Urbanistica is divided into four different sections, that in turn inform the perspective of the papers: Cities proposes contributions on the transformations of urban areas in Europe; Plans, projects, policies critically discusses the decision making process and the results of individual urban choices; Emerging Issues opens up the discussion on problematic aspects of contemporary cities and territories; Studies and Researches is devoted to the presentation and discussion of analyses and research reports.

The articles should be 3.500 words long (footnotes included).
